Antibacterial, antifungal and cytotoxic effects of Thymus ghoniifolius Boiss. Lamiaceae is a large family of flowering plants, native of the Mediterranean Basin. It is characterized by a wide variety of medicinal and aromatic species, including Thymus spp. In this study the antifungal, antibacterial and cytotoxic effects of Thymus ghoniifolius Boiss. (Labiatae) were investigated using agar diffusion, broth microdilution, cytotoxicity (MTT) assay, lactate dehydrogenase (LDH) leakage, extracellular membrane leakage, production of reactive oxygen species, as well as the activity of myeloperoxidase (MPO) and the release of arachidonic acid (AA). Using broth microdilution assays, the minimum inhibitory concentrations (MICs) of T. ghoniifolius were ranged from 0.5 to 8 mg mL⁻¹, whereas the MFC values were greater than or equal to 10 mg mL⁻¹, for both fungal and bacterial strains. Although T. ghoniifolius extract showed inhibitory effects against Gram-positive bacteria, it was inactive against Gram-negative bacteria. In MTT assay, the viability of cells exposed to the T. ghoniifolius extract was found to be similar to that of the control. When the effects of T. ghoniifolius extract on cultured cells were investigated, it was shown that this extract can cause cell death and release of LDH through both necrosis and apoptosis, suggesting that T. ghoniifolius induces apoptosis in a dose 1cb139a0ed
