Is it better to start with objects and work my way to surfaces and solids? Or use the other way around? Or does it really make a difference? And where would i be able to learn how to build a set of buildings and how to attach them to a terrain? A: In my opinion, the "hierarchy" is not what you need to focus on. What you really need to focus on is how and where you want to use your modeling tools to get the most out of them. I think a good approach is to start modeling the body of the building first. Then work your way back up, modeling the interior elements first and then the exterior. As for where you would learn how to build sets, this is typically introduced in the class that is being taught. Check out the manual for what is covered in the class. Q: Batch replace text with delimiter, varying delimiter length I need to replace some text using Batch. Unfortunately I don't know the length of the delimiter (like'or : or). Example: blabla : blabla and text, : text and text with me as a replacement I want to replace the first and second'and'with : without knowing their length. Is this possible in a batch file? A: An easier solution would be not to replace the text, but to define it as different text. :foo echo %~1-%~2 :bar echo %~1%~2 :echo_the_vars echo %~1%~2 Will give you the following output: :bar :foo :echo_the_vars The problem with the solution in the question is that it works only if the input text matches the delimiter exactly. Q: How to track the ticks of the Slider View in Swift 3? I am creating a simple app in which I want to track the values of the slider based
