Who are the key users of Photoshop? Photoshop is used by individuals at all levels, from hobbyist photographers to professionals, such as graphic designers and animators. As you have seen in the previous book, Photoshop is also used by many students to design and animate their own movies. It can be used for manipulating and improving photography and photo retouching. Does Photoshop really come with a bar of soap? It's hard to think of Photoshop without picturing the white, texture-covered bar of soap that you use to clean your hands after using the program. Fortunately, you don't need to. An additional hint of humor comes from the fact that the key of E is colored yellow in the keyboard shortcuts. The program is named after the initials of this keyboard key. What are the three basic tools in Photoshop? The primary three tools are the paintbrush, brush, and selection tools. The Paintbrush Tool Use the Paintbrush to paint out areas, erase portions of an image, paint a new area, and create vector-based patterns. The Brush Tool The Brush Tool is an instrument that enables you to make selections, create text and vector-based patterns, and make brush strokes. The Selection Tool The Selection Tool enables you to make selections based on color, shape, size, or location. How do you make selections using the Selection Tool? Use the Select menu and choose any of the available options: • Color Range – Use this tool to select a color range. • Color – Use this tool to select a color. • Layers Mask – Use this tool to select the current layer mask or apply that selection to the current layer mask. • Paths – Use this tool to create or select a path. • Refine Edge – Use this tool to add feathering to selected objects. • Gradient – Use this tool to add a gradient fill. How do you create a new document? You can create new documents via the Open dialog box. How do you create a new layer? Use the New Layer icon at the top of the Layers palette and a dialog box like the one shown in Figure 8-1 displays.

Figure 8-1: Use the New Layer icon at the top of the Layers palette to create a new layer.

Q: Set vector size from char* Say, I have a char * buffer containing the name of a vector, for example "std::vector" How can I store the size of this vector, from this buffer? I tried, char * buffer = strdup("std::vector"); size_t length = strlen(buffer) -1; int vector_size = length; but std::vector is a template, so the vector_size returns an error. How to solve this? A: The name of the container is accessed through the container interface provided by the STL. This interface is specific to the type, so a run-time type check is required before proceeding. I'll assume that the name of the template parameter is std::vector and provide only the code to access the size of std::vector (since accessing the name std::vector in the previous code works). #include #include #include void vectorSize() { std::vector v; std::size_t size = v.size(); } char * buffer = strdup("std::vector"); size_t length = strlen(buffer) -1; if (std::strcmp(buffer, "std::vector") == 0) { int vector_size = 0; std::vector::iterator it; it = std::find(buffer + length, buffer + length + 1, '>'); if ((it!= buffer + length + 1) && (*it == ' ')) {

What's New In?

Well, it turned out that the eternal mythical phoenix that never dies is an actual, living, breathing, year-old thing. Wow. This is actually what K-Rod meant. It turns out you don't need stat projections to find out that K-Rod's replacement has been awful since 2008. The Royals are more valuable and more wins above replacement than they were when Randa Jelenski picked up the torch, but basically the same. So that's the answer to the eternal question: how long can things stay the same in MLB? The answer's always the same. Not often, anyway. You guys just seem to find a season in which that's broken down the further it goes, but it's always true, really. Maybe tonight will be the night. These are the numbers I've found after two full months of data: Marlins: Strength: Danny Espinosa hits lefties better than righties, but righties are hitting his pitches better in the last month. Weakness: Evan Gattis is hurt, so the losing may be continuing. Upcoming Starters: Logan Morrison, Javier Baez, Alex Gonzalez Bullpen depth: Steve Cishek, Heath Bell, Rex Brothers, Tom Koehler Deadly: Jose Fernandez, Josh Johnson, R.A. Dickey Gio Gonzalez, Colorado Rockies Strength: Gonzalez's fastball reaches up into the high 90s and has topped out at 97-98. Weakness: He's not missing many bats; Bautista and Desmond have hit him and other starters better. Upcoming Starters: Drew Pomeranz, TBD, TBD Bullpen depth: TBD, TBD, TBD Deadly: TBD Chris Sale, White Sox Strength: Sale's 96-97 mph heater is filthy. Weakness: He's going to let a lot of contact go through, which is something that's not going to get better as he gets older. Upcoming Starters: TBD Bullpen depth: TBD, TBD Deadly: TBD Jake Arrieta, Cubs Strength: Arrieta is healthy and the Cubs are winning. Weakness: His fastball ticked up a mile per hour from August 19th to September 6th, but he has that soft, bumpy breaking ball that's not really an out
