Unlike other viruses that simply write copies of themselves to the hard drive and wait for infection, this virus modifies the Windows bootloader. This means that when you start Windows, you may find that Windows XP, Windows 2000, or Windows Vista cannot boot. When you restart your computer, even if it is still there, you may see that your computer simply won't boot.

Because Windows XP, Windows 2000, or Windows Vista cannot boot, you cannot start the installation disc and run the Windows Recovery application that normally starts when Windows boots. However, not all is lost. If you have installed anti-virus software, you can restore your data using the recovery program.
