The most impressive thing about this new release is that it is a native 64 bit application that has not been converted from 32-bit. The fact that it is all provided in one program is also a great selling point.Q: What is the best way to require a file extension in meteor.js? I would like to require a file extension in meteor so that the client-side script is only executed if a file with that extension is loaded, something like: if

(fileExt.extension == "pdf") { // execute code }

I would like a way that doesn't involve if statements because this functionality would have to be executed for both HTML files and PNGs. Edit I am trying to make it so that the client-side code is only executed when the client is viewing a PDF, and not a PNG or HTML file. The client-side code is only executed for PDFs (but not all files with a.PDF extension). A: You can use `file.match(/\pdf$/i)` to check if the file is a.pdf file. If the file has extension you can use `document.URL.split('.').pop()` to get the extension. `var extension = document.URL.split('.').pop(); if (file.match(/\pdf$/i)) { //extension == "pdf"; }`

A view of the newly renovated block by OPA Architects and planning. The streets are changing...and for the better. In some ways, the transformation of Walnut Street over the past few years has been more visible than the construction of the I-90 bridge. The area around the train station, which saw the construction of new buildings in the last decade, is now moving into a new phase. What was once one of the last rows of warehouses and old buildings on Walnut, squeezed between the train station and Kent Street is now the new booming heart of Philadelphia's technology and creative spaces. And the upcoming construction of an extension of the SEPTA Regional Rail line to a new SEPTA bus terminal at the intersection of Walnut and Commonwealth Avenue is set to continue the transformation of this area. Renovation project in the pipeline The Verizon Center and hotel are set for a second and third phase of renovation. The most visible change to the area in the
