Q: Change column name in a DataGridView while retaining the column's original data I have a DataGridView bound to my DataTable and I want to change the column name of a column, without loosing the original data of the column. DataGridView1.Columns("ID").Name = "Account" For example, I want to change the ID column name to Account and retain the original ID data. I'm trying to achieve this using the above code, but I'm getting the exception: System.ArgumentException: Value does not fall within the expected range. Parameter name: originalColumn How can I accomplish this? A: Try this: Dim ds as DataSet = [...] ds.Tables("MyTable").Columns("ID").ColumnName = "Account" What do you think the difference is between "smile" and "smile with the mouth"? Many people now hold that a smile has two parts — a "nose" and a "mouth." A "smile with the mouth" is a smile where the face is made up entirely of both of these components. (An open mouth shows that.) The "nose" would be the face without the mouth — and without a nose would show that the face is smiling. But doesn't it sound a little strange to say that you are smiling with the mouth? Wouldn't this imply that you are making a mask of the mouth, in the same way that a mask of the nose is covering the nose? Or is this saying something different? The "smile" and "smile with mouth" responses are very similar, and they are very similar in meaning. Although the differences are subtle, they are as significant as the differences in spelling "finger" and "finger-nail." The noun "smile" is derived from the verb "to smile." (The fact that the verb is irregular does not make it ambiguous; we would not say the same about the verb "drink" or the adjective "hot.") The verb "to smile" means to express amusement at something you are seeing, thinking about, or experiencing. For example, "She smiled when she saw her children." Her amusement — that which she exhibited — was directed at seeing her children. The noun "smile" often has a more specific meaning. It describes a facial expression that

Category Archives: News Today, Google released its Q1 earnings report, and it's a solid quarter for the search giant. With $7.27 billion in revenues for the quarter and a net income of $5.37 billion, operating income grew 26% from the previous year to $2.13 billion. Revenues actually rose from $5.24 billion last year, giving Google a $72 million profit increase. It's good news, and it seems to have only continued into the second quarter as Google beat the first quarter's revenues and earnings projections. Meanwhile, Android continued to grow. Billions in revenues were generated, with Android growing from 52% to 56% of Google's revenue. Android and the various devices using it both contribute to Google's incredible growth. The primary contributor is the fact that smartphones now make up 95% of all mobile phone sales. The fact that Android has 98% of the smartphone market means that software developers can focus on developing for Android and outsource the rest to Windows and Symbian. The growth and success of Android allows Google to focus on what's important – their search engine. So while Apple continued to grow despite significant competition, Google's revenue growth was strong and continued, despite the slow economy. Perhaps more importantly, Android continues to grow – a testament to its success. Join my email list so you don't miss out on the latest posts and happenings of the EverNice. Thanks! I was going to send out an email a couple days ago, but I decided against it because I'm trying to be more consistent about blogging. Blogging will always be part of my life, but I want to make it more a part of my life than it was. So why the blog silence? Well, much like I wanted to post last week, I'm also trying to get things ready to move. Next weekend, I'll be moving out of my parents' house, into my apartment. It's going to be a big day, as not only will I be moving out of my house, but I'm moving out of my state. It won't be as easy as it sounds, so you can understand why I'm a little crazy. With that in mind, here are a few cool things coming down the pipeline over the next little while: If
