I need to write a function that takes a word as a parameter and outputs a boolean. A: You can use Pattern that is part of the stdlib and which can be found here. Here is an example with your sentence and the pattern: import re sentence = 'the apple is red' pattern = re.compile(r'red apple') if pattern.match(sentence): # match. else: # not match. Here is a more in depth example of the same. As noted by James Woodrow, regular expressions have a reputation of being hard to grasp. He also provides a link to a great introductory post on the topic of regexes. The following link presents an excellent explanation on the subject of Regular Expressions. Regular Expressions Note: If you're new to regex and want to know more, I suggest you go through a tutorial and maybe a couple of examples. It will better prepare you for future questions you might have, and for the possibly more difficult part of the job. 1.
