In a car, you need to find a comfortable driving position for the best driving experience and to make sure that you're comfortable and protected. If you're driving a convertible, you may find that certain driving positions are more comfortable than others. After all, you'll want to be able to adjust your position to suit your mood or the type of road you're driving on. Driving positions Depending on the car and the amount of space you have available, you'll want to look for certain driving positions that you can adjust to suit your needs. Here are a few examples of driving positions: Drive position The most commonly used position is the driver's seat. It's the most natural position, as it's the closest to the pedals and gearshift. It's also the most suitable position for the shortest journeys as the gearshift won't be an issue and the pedals are more easily reachable. When driving longer routes, it's best to switch to the passenger seat as you can roll your window down and adjust the air-conditioning to cool down on those hot summer drives. Side-facing seat If you're short on seat space, you can try the side-facing position. It's a very comfortable driving position as it positions your chest in a more comfortable way and is better for driving in traffic. However, the seat is in a slightly awkward position and could be uncomfortable if driving for a long time. Midship seat If you have a lot of space, you can choose the midship seat. This seat can be accessed easily using the car 1cdb3666d
