Every move a player makes in the game is dynamically recreated, providing an authentic football experience. In-game cameras use the motion-capture data to recreate the shots, passes and moves of real players in high-definition. Players can be instantly slotted into their optimal position and can be used as natural ball-carriers, either standing or with an off-the-ball run. "The core of 'HyperMotion Technology' is the athlete-data we capture when they play a match," said Peter Li, Senior Producer, FIFA. "This live data has been collected from more than 150 professional matches, which means we can render a player's dynamic actions in the game accurately." Every player has a unique physical appearance thanks to the motion-capture data captured in the game. Players can also run, tackle, pass, head, and receive the ball with precise details such as weight, slippage, sliding and angle.

Players' movements are reflected in real-life movements, providing for a more realistic-looking soccer game. The game also has a new AI system called "Intelligent Player," which adapts to the player's actions. With Intelligent Player, in-game behaviors adapt to how the player plays; AI teammates create more chances for the player when he is on the ball and get back to their defensive positions when in danger of losing possession.
