Dental casts of 190 Spanish anterior open bite (AOB) patients and 649 matched controls were compared. There was a significant difference in maxillary total arch length (TAL) between the AOB and normal control groups. Girls had significantly longer TAL than boys. The significant difference in TAL persisted in both sexes, with and without extraction of first premolars, after controlling for other variables. There was no difference in TAL between boys and girls with AOB. There was no difference in TAL
