I don't know if it is really burnt inside the microwave or only a byproduct of the burning. I checked online about the fumes and found that people usually described the same type of smell. I found a couple of solutions online such as dissolving baking soda, vinegar, or baking powder in boiling water and adding it to the microwave, then the oven will heat up normal. I tried the first solution and it works, but I'm afraid this will be a temporary fix, because in the future we won't always have access to boiling water to make these solutions. A: Someone who has microwaved for a while will tell you that the fumes of hot food in the microwave will leave an unpleasant smell for a while. It doesn't sound so
