The basic idea is to make a list of strings in a file and then run a difflib.SequenceMatcher to compare it to the original file. Then I like to return a list with the changes made, listing each line as a list of strings. I have a class named 'Patch' that is supposed to hold the patch string for debugging purposes. It also has a patch() method that takes in 2 lists. I am confused about passing the 2 lists in to the patch() function. Here is my code thus far, def diff(file, class1, class2, lowest): import difflib patcher = Patch(class1, class2) difflib.SequenceMatcher(None, file, class1).set_seq1(class1) difflib.SequenceMatcher(None, class1, class2).
