It's a great development for iOS because it is not a. Portable toilets are small self-contained structures which are usually referred to as "portable" because they can be moved from place to place more readily than, for example, a conventional toilet which must be lifted into the ground or placed against a wall when not in use. Portable toilets are usually made of steel, usually of an open, cone shape in plan, and most of the outward parts of the structure are open to the outside. One or more of the openings are open towards the top (or are covered by a suitable flapper valve) to permit flushing of the interior of the unit. In the absence of a flushing device, the toilet must be flushed from the top, usually by means of a water spigot which extends upwardly above the top of the toilet or by some other method such as a flushing bucket. A wide variety of "portable" toilets, collectively referred to herein as "portable toilets", are known. The following list of patents illustrates a variety of "portable toilets" and the people who have developed them: U.S. Pat. No. 4,953,892--Voorhees (1990) PA1 U.S. Pat.
