File types and storage files Understanding how images work within the digital realm is critical to creating a professional image. Images, like music tracks, may be stored in a digital format as a _file._ In the case of a traditional picture, it would be stored on a printable photograph or negative. The file contains the data for the image, but more importantly it includes a unique name for the image that enables it to be sent to another computer for editing or used in other projects. Along with a file and its name come other pieces of data, which may be separated by a "file extension." File extensions are not actually what they sound like. They are just the letters and numbers that follow a file's name (similar to how the "extension" of a file is used in the Windows OS to identify programs). **L **: A file extension in the GIF format stores the file's length (1,024 bytes) and color information. These are the two most basic characteristics of the file. **.

Sunday, December 29, 2012 I appreciate all the positive comments and feedback I've gotten since I posted my idea to make the personalized cupcakes. As mentioned in one of the comments, I received quite a few inquiries regarding the possibility of making these cupcakes available in stores. It would not be possible for me to make them available as a mass produced item, since each cake cupcake is hand made and contains approximately 3 tablespoon of cream cheese. Mass production would require a minimum of 6 cupcakes per case. This would still be expensive considering the icing and finishing are what make these cupcakes special. Since I like the idea of it being available at specialty stores, I'm going to investigate the possibilities. If anyone is interested in sharing their contact information or their perspective of the possibility of getting a set for a store, please contact me.

Tuesday, December 17, 2012 I recently made a change in the size of the cupcake sleeve. My original sleeves were 3.5 inches tall, yet I was told by a store owner that they requested cupcakes in a 3.5 x 4.5 inch box. There is not a lot of wiggle room in that small of a box. It becomes almost impossible to place a whole cupcake inside the box. I changed the size of the boxes and the cupcake sleeves to a 3.25 x 4.75 inch box and I'm able to fill it with cupcakes. But again, it gets a little tight. Because of this, I added a border around the cupcakes to make them look prettier. You could probably just make the cupcakes with a border and I would be set, but I went a step further and filled in the gussets. This picture shows how the cupcakes look when they are displayed on the floor.

Saturday, December 14, 2012 I've always been intrigued by the "holey cake" look. And I've made it several times. Unfortunately, I've never been able to get a consistent look. Usually I would just be happy with making them look white, yet they still look like the cake underneath. The boxes of cupcakes I was using were the standard size box. That is 3.5 x 4.5 inches. I was getting a box with flat sides that sometimes looked like a box with top and bottom and sometimes they just looked flat. Also, the top would not stay on. I decided to go a different
