I've been thinking about this for a while and I can't think of a simpler solution. I'm a beginner, so please be kind. I basically want to compare the output of: System.out.println("Hello, world!") and System.out.println("The programmer's world"); Obviously, the first 'print' statement should output the string "Hello, world!" and then the second output the string "The programmer's world". I want to be able to compare the two strings, and then do something based on the result. A: There are several solutions. In my opinion, the best is to use StringBuffer for such a task. StringBuffer sb = new StringBuffer("Hello, world!"); Now, you can easily compare them like this: if ("The programmer's world".equals(sb.toString())) { System.out.println("Yeah"); } else { System.out.println("Nope"); } A: You can use StringBuilder to avoid problems with the StringBuilder sb = new StringBuilder(); sb.append("Hello, world!"); sb.append("The
