The effects of continuous or long-term blockade of estrogen receptors on the regulation of neuropeptide Y (NPY) and estrogen receptor mRNA levels in medial basal hypothalamic/preoptic area (MBH/POA) neurons were investigated in gonadally intact or ovariectomized female rats. The number of NPY-immunoreactive (ir) cells in MBH was similar in intact rats with or without estradiol. Long-term estradiol (E), progesterone, or tamoxifen (TAM) treatment did not alter the number of NPY-ir cells. A single long-term E injection or chronic treatment with TAM increased the level of NPY mRNA but not that of estrogen receptor alpha (ER alpha) mRNA in MBH. In contrast, administration of nerve growth factor (NGF) for 14 days significantly decreased the level of NPY mRNA and increased the level of ER alpha mRNA in MBH. Neither the numbers of cells that stained with the c-fos protein in MBH nor the level of c-fos mRNA was altered by long-term E, TAM or NGF. These results indicate that the stimulatory effect of long-term E treatment on NPY mRNA level in MBH mostly the last week or two. But here's some of the picks: Last week I took some time off, and next week I fly out with my fiancee to San Francisco for the holidays. I'm also getting some travel writing work out of town. I have a great dentist appointment in SF this week, and my cousin and I are planning a trip up there for a few days of touring. I'll have that post up before I leave. Also got a couple of e-mails
