

Stay up to date with EldenRing: This was so fun. I must say, I had a blast. Play your mind out! Most action RPGs these days are heavily influenced by dungeon crawlers like Diablo. Legend of Mana was one of the few JRPGs (I'm using that word in a very loose manner) to nail it and I'm so thankful for the game, for making me feel something for the first time in a long time. The combat was fun and I like the concept of the entire game world being huge. It's a true RPG, that also retains some of the things I love about Action RPGs. The weapon lock-on, which is that point in the game where you lock onto a specific enemy and attacks from the slot you selected come out on its head. It feels good. The second act of the game felt really short, but for my tastes, the whole game was a lot of fun, and I enjoyed it. I hope to play it again. The story was nice, I liked the whole concept of how you are an NPC being sent back to the real world. Very good idea. You just don't realize how bad things have become until you start to live in that kind of a world. I wish more developers would think about things like that, I feel like it's an excellent idea and something that can make the world feel a lot more alive. The NPCs are fairly simple, they mostly just make sure you get everything you need, and they're fairly well presented. The characters are interesting, each one has their own personality and background. I had fun chatting with them. I wish I could interact with more of them. That would have been nice. I guess it's a game made with almost no budget and they need to prioritize things to make sure everything is in working order. I would really like to see more games like that, not just because I think it would make the world feel more alive, but because I think it would make the game better. People who don't
