Fixes game Free Download.Q: SVG element constraints and using CSS with a fallback style How does one do this type of thing with SVG? I want the element to be responsive and according to W3C specs, it must use the "min-width" property to be responsive. But the `img` element I'm using is a fixed width (obviously), and if I do use the `min-width` property, it shows up too small on some screens. So I want the SVG element to be responsive, it's default size should be around 400px but if it needs to go smaller it should be responsive, and if it's too big it should be smaller. If possible, I do want to keep the SVG as an SVG, not as HTML. Example: `img { width: 400px; min-width: 50%; }`
