A Florida man who was waiting for a restraining order to be served over the weekend complained to police after his stepdaughter's date tried to break into his car. Ryan Singer, of Clearwater, was pulled over by police Sunday after he spotted someone trying to break into his car, according to an arrest report obtained by FOX 13. When asked why he pulled the woman over, Singer told police that she was trying to get away from her friend who had been trying to break into his car. Singer said he was escorting his stepdaughter to school, and he noticed that a car had followed his vehicle. Once his stepdaughter arrived at school, Singer said the car stopped behind him, and the driver's side window was smashed. He said the suspect was a man wearing a black jacket. Singer said he then told the man he should be arrested for the attempted break-in. He said the man tried to run and Singer got out of his vehicle to block him. BOCA RATON, FL —

A story of a middle-aged M.E. (cough) with a great sense of humor who also thinks he can kick butt, with the help of his high tech suit-of-armor and his dog, a dog who bears an uncanny resemblance to a bunch of other dogs he met along the way... but I digress. Meet Nick Manganiello, a modern day renaissance man. He has got it all, as well as a healthy dose of attitude. After a decade long stint in New York City performing both in front of and behind the camera, he changed his career, and decided to focus all of his energy and talents on making moves and taking charge. So he did, and now he is living his dream. Now that is somely of a man that could kick your ass.... He believes in a fair fight, not roulette. A man that's got integrity, but who knows how to party. A man who uses his voice to make a difference. A man that gives no fucks and will not apologize. He's a powerful giant of a man, but he's also a real down to earth guy who understands the will of the universe, and is not afraid to use it.
