Eating problems are common in young children with autism. However, little is known about the broader spectrum of challenges preschool children with autism face when having meals in a school setting. One hundred and five preschool children (50 boys and 55 girls) with an autism spectrum disorder or a developmental delay (6-36 months old) were included. Two focus groups with all school teachers and four half-day focus groups with teachers and parents, respectively, were held to examine preschool children's meal-time experience and related challenges. Thematic analysis and content analysis were used to analyse the data. Findings revealed that children with autism reported having less autonomy during meal-time, and had an overall negative experience of school meals. Mothers played a significant role in mealtime by dealing with children's
