Q: How to prevent a user from being able to download a file I am using python 3.5 for a project. I am creating a method that allows people to download a file (called 'file.txt', the file is stored on my server), but I want to make sure that people can only download the file once, and are unable to download it again and again. How would I make a file that won't allow a user to download it more than once? A: You can use the os module with os.link method: import os def link_file(filename): link = 'file.txt' dirname = '/path/to/dir' filename = os.path.join(dirname, filename) try: os.link(filename, link) return True except: return False Usage: link_file('file.txt') # disable link link_file('file.txt') # enable link Hint: If the file is located in the same directory as your script (python script.py), then you don't need to specify the path when calling link_file method. Link to docs: [Secondary clefts of the lip and palate]. Although secondary palatal clefts are more often to be found on the left, the relation between ipsilateral clefts of the lip and palate on the

In our patient, the colonic perforation was probably due to hepatic encephalopathy and sepsis, as encephalopathy and sepsis were the triggering factors. Colonic perforation can occur in the presence of other major surgical conditions. We found only one other report of postcholecystectomy colonic perforation \[[@B13]\]. Eight months after the cholecystectomy, the patient underwent liver transplantation for sclerosing cholangitis and died 11 months after the liver transplantation. The cause of death was multiple organ failure, which was attributed to the underlying hepatic disease and septic shock. Combining extensive laparoscopic experience, knowledge about potential surgical complications, and prompt recognition and treatment, a laparoscopic approach can be safely and effectively performed even in elderly patients. We believe that our case demonstrates the feasibility of laparoscopic management in elderly patients with a perforated colon.

Following the 2007/08 influenza season when newly licensed adjuvanted vaccines caused the lowest uptake in the UK, the 2009/10 season was the first where uptake of the newly licensed non-adjuvanted vaccine was consistently lower than for adjuvanted vaccines. In this analysis we describe the effect of pandemic influenza A (H1N1) 2009 vaccination on subsequent vaccination uptake and patient characteristics. Using data collected by the National Health Service in England for the 2009/10 season we compared uptake of pandemic influenza A (H1N1) 2009 by pandemic and non-pandemic vaccine by age, sex, influenza-like illness (ILI) status and patient characteristics. We also compared uptake of seasonal influenza A/B vaccination by pandemic and non-pandemic vaccine. Uptake
