Microsoft: YouTube and Bing Collaborate on Video Discovery
Google's YouTube and Microsoft's Bing platform are joining forces to provide content discovery for both online and mobile users. The companies have unveiled plans for a partnership that will see the videos from Bing's 65 million monthly searches filter down into YouTube. The partnership will see YouTube taking charge of the discovery, while Bing will continue to bring content from its vast database to the service. Bing's technology will help to bring content from the Microsoft Search Center to YouTube. The search engine will also add relevant videos to search results from YouTube videos as well as from Bing, Wikipedia, Facebook, and Twitter. "People spend so much time online, so much time on their phone," says Deb Heikes, general manager of search and content at Microsoft. "But a lot of that time is spent browsing. And a lot of that browsing happens by word of mouth. By watching videos that people find on other websites."
