San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick is heading to a court hearing on allegations he should be fired as the team's backup, according to the Associated Press. The terms of the hearing will be in agreement to settle the $11 million lawsuit that was filed against the 49ers. In other words, Kaepernick and the 49ers will be on the same page. It's not what the 49ers would've liked, but it should clear up any concerns about the future of Kaepernick in the NFL. Whether or not Kaepernick is cut or traded, let's turn now to the future. The 49ers will likely open with Kaepernick at quarterback this fall, and he may be the guy for the next couple of years. The question is: At what cost? Kaepernick was drafted No. 11 overall in the 2012 NFL Draft. He started to get some regular-season playing time after a year in the practice squad, and he's shown obvious, game-changing potential. But his chances of becoming the 49ers' starting quarterback? Highly questionable, and probably below 50 percent. The 2014 NFL season should be the last one for Kaepernick. By many accounts, he is not the future of the 49ers. If he fails to earn the starting job this year, it will be hard to imagine him with the 49ers in 2015 or beyond. It's reasonable to think the 49ers will franchise Kaepernick as a possible tag candidate in 2015. Even if they decline to tag him, he'll likely receive a substantial signing bonus because he'll get a chance to prove his worth. There's no reason to think the 49ers will lose a first-round draft pick by choosing to franchise him, although they did just that with wide receiver Michael Crabtree this year. There are some trade exceptions available to the 49ers, but in the unlikely event they do part with Kaepernick, they'll need to absorb any contract guarantees they had left in their top-10 draft slot. That might prove to be a problem. Colin Kaepernick's $1.8 million salary for 2013 c9d1549cdd

The bomb went off in Lashkargah's Mes Aynat (Martyrs) Square, as a large crowd was gathering after the Friday afternoon prayer. Some of the wounded have been taken to nearby hospitals. The Taliban claimed responsibility for the attack. The secretary general of the provincial council confirmed that at least 61 people had been killed in the attack. Gulalai Kalimzai, a spokesman for the governor of Helmand, put the death toll at 50. "The suicide car bomb attack targeted a main gathering of the people following Friday prayers, killing 45 militants as well as seven civilians," the governor's spokesman Mohammad Jan Rasuli told Al Jazeera. The attack comes as part of a broader Taliban offensive in the country, as the group battles to regroup after their near-defeat by US-backed Afghan forces and the army and police last year. The Taliban have stepped up their attacks since the start of the year and this month they seized Kunduz, Afghanistan's largest city
