Robux is an online game which allows users to create their own games and play other users' games. Players can play a free round of games by simply playing the game and earning Robux as the reward. For every 100 points earned, 10 Robux are awarded, making Robux the most simple and fair currency in a game. Robux can be used to purchase game-related items or to exchange for another game-related item. The game is available in many languages such as English, Spanish, French, Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Russian, Italian, etc. Recently, Roblox has seen a huge number of users join the game and it now has over 164 million monthly active users, including more than half of all American children under 16.[1] Roblox is free to play, with in-game purchases available through a virtual currency called Robux. Roblox is a video game franchise that began with the creation of the first game in 2006 by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel. The game was initially released to individuals in April 2006, and in February 2007 it was released to the public in the United States by Major League Gaming, who then partnered with Roblox to distribute the game. Roblox was created by these two engineers, both of whom were working at Microsoft. The founders took the idea for the game from a three-year university project they had previously worked on. The game initially showcased new ideas in game design including a social gaming platform and the use of virtual reality, but the concept soon became popular and the game was soon the fourth most-popular site in the United States. As of 2015, Roblox had over 142 million monthly active users[5] and was available in over a hundred languages.[6] In October 2015, Roblox began offering free games as a result of a partnership with Disney.[7]
