It does exactly what I want. Thanks, that's exactly what I was looking for. Using the suggestion on the second answer, I tried the following: Make the working directory my current directory. Then try the following: `import os import re from os.path import join, isdir, isfile if __name__ == '__main__': dirs = os.walk('D:\\my\\path\\', topdown=False) for root, dirs, files in dirs: for file in files: if isdir(join(root, file)): print(file)` I do not get any results. Where is the error? How can I use `os.walk` and print only the specified files in the current directory? A: This uses the `os.walk` function to explore the directory and then uses the `os` module to check whether a filename is a directory or not. When the directory name is the same as the filename, we print the file. `import os def is_directory(dirname): try: return os.path.isdir(dirname) except ValueError: return False` for root, dirs, files in `os.walk('D:\\my\\path\\')`: for file in files: if `is_directory(join(root, file))`: print(file)
